The rocks in this neck are manifestly of volcanic origin, black and smooth in sur face, as if once melted.

"I have my own theory about the emption," said Capt. Smith, of the Perry, yesterday. "I believe there is a lake of fire far down in the earth that connects with the outlets in those volcanoes in Central America. I am told that in the Central American States the volcanoes are especially active just now. While there is pecially active just now. While there is no great eruption reported, there is steady activity, just such activity as is observed on that chain of islands that I have been looking at all summer. I believe that the whole lake of fire is now boiling and hotter than ever, and that this state of great activity beneath the surface of the earth, perhaps many miles, is the cause of the rising sincke and steam in the north and at the same time of the clouds of smoke and the flow of lava in the south."

"There is not an army post in the country, or in the world, that has not some fitte romance interwoven in its history. But one which I especially remember is one in which the faithfulness of a woman, as I will call it, played such an important part as to fix the story in my mind forever.

"It was about five years ago, at a "It was about five years ago, at a Western fort, that this incident happened. We had there a young private who came, I believe, from the North some where. I never believe, from the North some where. We had there a young private who came, I believe, from the North some where. I never did find out exactly where he did come from, and I have even forgotten his name now. He seemed to be an indifferent sort of a fellow, rarely joining the rest of the men in their larks, and keeping pretty much to himself. He was a handsome young man, too, nearly six feet tall, if I remember correctly. It was his mysterious manters which made us wonder what he did with himself in mis spare moments—that is, when his time was not required by Uncle Sam. We tried in vain to find out. All that we could ever learn of him was that he was always in his mess room during these intervals, and his companion privates there said, 'He reads and reads all the time,' that's all. Army life did not seem to agree with him very much, and we could not see why he ever entered into it. Still there was no one in the fort with nerve enough to ask him the questions we were so anxious to have answered. He was the one mystery of the fort. Perhaps you will wonder why we officers should take any interest in a common private, but before I am through you will see why that was Mount Vernon Seminary WOUNT VERNON SEMINARY

Her name, you must remember, distinctly, is Genevieve Hutle. She was the belie of the fort. I do not believe to this day that there was hardly a man in that fort at that time who would not have stood even ludian torture if she had so wished—but don't be alarmed, gentlemen. No such thought would ever have entered that girl's mind. And then she was very beautiful. Perhaps this find something to do with it. No such thought would ever have entered that girl's mind. And then she was very beautiful. Perhaps this find something to do with it. Those among us who had been sick had especial reasons for feeling grateful to her, for as soon as she heard of a case of sickness she seemed to be on plus and needles until she received consent from her father to nurse the sick one, whether he was offlier or private. In truth, her kindness and charitableness to all made adorers out of half the men in the fort, and the other half were dead in love with her.

"Now, to get down to the story. One day there came the announcement that the Indians had gone on the warpath and."

The line of islands lying between the Bering sea and the Pacific Ocean belong to the United States, and on them are probably the only active volcances lying within American territory. The cruption is general, and so very lively that at night the airy columns take on the reflections of the fires deep in the earth beneath the craters. Nowhere else on the globe can such a sight be witnessed. According to Capt. Smith it is as wonderful as the flery mysteries on Hawaii.

"It was a busy seeme at the fort that morning. Soon the bogle sounded, the men leaped into their saddies and moved up to the gate of the fort. It was a proudmoment for the men who composed that troop, for it was their first actual expedition after an enemy. Then came the sound of the bogle again and the men were off, with the cheers of their comrades ringing in their ears.

"We in the fort had many anxious hours that day and night, wondering how the expedition would turn out, though we little "It was a busy scene at the fort that morn pedition would turn out, though we little thought that there would be any serious resulfs. They would probably return, we thought, with the whole band of redskins as prisoners. We had no idea that the red devils would dare defy them or much less fire on them.

"During the night a terrible snow storm set in, however, and we kept anxious watch to see if they would give up the chase on this account and return to the fort. But no. The night passed away and dawn still saw no trace of the men. The storm seemed to become more furious with the advent of day and the blinding flakes made it impossible to see many feet outside the fort. Then misgivings regarding the safety of the men began to take form. We had now almost forgotten about the Indians and our only thoughts were of the men and how they would manage to return to the fort in this terrible storm. About noon there was a hill in the wind and snow and couriers were sent out to see if any trace of the troop could be found. They might be wandering a few miles outside the fort, we thought, unable to find the way in. The searchers returned, however, after a fruitiess search, saying that it was impossible to find any trace of them, not knowing exactly where to look for night passed away and dawn still saw no them, not knowing exactly where to look for them. The ground, of course, having been covered by the show storm after their de-parture, it was impossible to follow in their tracks.

"About 3 o'clock in the afternoon, how-ever, we were rewarded in our watch by seeing a dark mass off to the west, and as it drew nearer a shout went up from the watchers, as we discovered our missing

"When the men rode into the fort again they were plied with questions as to what they had done during the terrible storm. dians had lost quite a few to the happy bunting grounds. They at last gave up the chare when the storm set in. The 'mysterious private' was missed when the troop emerged from a strip of words about twenty miles from the fort. He was wounded during the light, and had evidently given up the light from exhaustion. While the near were telling this we stood about and wondered what wound be denot of find the poor fellow, who had now undoubtedly passed into another world.

"The storm had again commenced with seemingly added fory, and we realized what a dangerous undertaking it would be for any one to set out with the intention of finding the poor fellow's body. We retired to our quarters after hearing no end of narrow escape stories from some of the privates, to await enders from the commendant as to the next move.

"We had all given up the idea of going after the body by nightfall—that is, all but the private my time for arising the next

she had come in from a morning's pleasure ride.

"That girl had actually ridden out of the fort at dawn to find that young scamp, who did not seem to be hart at all, save for a few scratches such as the rest of the troop had received. She had met him, for-utnately, riding toward the fort, or God knows what might have become of that brave girl in the snow. It surprised me, perhaps, to see her so happy after such a dangerous undertaking. But that was, of course, natural then, as I did not know what had passed between them during that ride. that ride

"During the absence of the young fellow one of his comrades had cheek enough to examine his effects—to find out who he was and to notify his relatives of his death, so he said, but, as I believe, to find out what the deuce it was that kept him so hasy during the evenings. But the hig stories the man expected to tell of what he found are still untold, for he found 'only a lot of books, principally law books, newspaper clippings of testimony in trails, and a paper clippings of testimony in trials, and a lot of other useless trash, as he expressed himself. What the dence the fellow was doing with these was more than he could imagine. Then a great light burst upon me. Imagine a private in the service of Uncle Sam giving me all the above.
